PROUDLY PRESENTS

“ETHICAL ISSUES WITH VIRTUAL REMOTE WORK”

While some lawyers and staff were adept at remote work prior to the pandemic, the majority were catapulted into this strange new world by the global pandemic in 2020. Three years later, even as many have returned to in-person work, there is no doubt that things in the legal field have changed forever. Many firms are offering hybrid work options for lawyers and staff. Some firms have transitioned to being fully remote, and many courts have a strong preference for video appearances, rather than in-person appearances. For some, this “new normal” is a blessing; for others, a curse. This program will address ethical issues that arise in the context of virtual remote work.
